PRESERVING KETTLES WORKED OVER TIME

SURPLUS FRUIT AND VEGETABLES ARE CANNED OR DRIED BY DILIGENT HOUSEWIVES.

PREPARE FOR WINTER

Conservation Campaign Brings Good Results—Cold Pack Process Proves Generally Successful.

"Fruit spreads for daily bread," has been one of the slogans, which has been heard by the housewives all over the country this summer. The preserving kettle has been in use and the art of canning has been brought into the land. The humble cucumber has hardly been shown itself, before it has been seized upon by the alert housewife for her pickle jar, and it, by the way, is its modest retirement, under the sheltering leaves of its parent stalk it attains maturity, it still is not exempt from the cold pack process. New and weird combinations have been invented by the genius of the careful housewife, to utilize every bit of available material of food value.

Two or three kinds of fruit juices are combined for jelly and the possibilities in the mixtures for preserves has been practically unlimited. The commonplace rhubarb jam, made by the basis of many kinds of jams, and when disguised with pineapple, currants or cherries, has made some very dainty products. The day of watermelon rind preserves is now in its utilization. One local housewife claims to have originated a most delicious combination in watermelon rind and grapefruit, and cooked until thick with cherry juice and sugar. That apple peeling and wild grapes make a delicate jelly when the juice is cooked with sugar has been discovered by another, who has been experimenting along that line.

Fruit in our own market has been very scarce and high in price all the season so that a great amount has been bought for canning purposes. But there seems to be the determination not to let a bit of the local fruit crop be wasted. Apples, cherries, grapes and berries will be available to a large extent from our home orchards and will be utilized in various ways. The motto: "Can what you can, and what you can't can, dry" has also been in evidence among our local housekeepers. The bountiful products of the little garden plots during the early part of the season was of no consequence for winter use, with scrupulous care. Government bulletins on the canning of vegetables were anxiously consulted and jars of all kinds of garden stuff were prepared for winter use. Beet greens, peas, beans, carrots and beets have been the favorite subject of experimentation. One novice in the art of canning, who kept her ears of beets and carrots on her sideboard and proudly exhibited them to chance callers.

A careful inquiry as to the success of the cold pack method, which is the one advocated by the government, brought out the fact that there has been practically no failure in its use where the methods were followed. Investigation shows that some seemingly simple direction has been disregarded, which has caused the spoilage. One very common mistake made by the operator has been to make the cover and fill up the jar before the tight sealing of its contents. This latter addition is, of course, not sterile, and causes the spoilage. The war rubbers have been of poor quality for this season and have caused a lot of trouble. Leakage has not been discovered until the pop of the jars, has advertised this fact. The local committee who have been in charge of the canning demonstration, have taken pains to trace every case of reported failure in the canning conditions, and in every one of their failure they have found a mistake in following the directions. For instance, the vegetables canned in the county demonstration by Miss Amery of the university extension work, had spoiled. In looking into this matter they found that Miss Amery had only given the first processing and had given directions to the owner of the vegetables to reheat them for an hour on the second and third days. This was not done, and, of course, they spoiled. Innumerable instances of that sort have been found.

The drying of fruits, an vegetable has been done successfully by many. Elderly ladies are reviving their old time skill in the drying of apples and probably dried apple pie will be a favorite delicacy on the tables of Rock county farmers this winter. The drying of corn, which was an old time method of conserving that food product, has also been again used very extensively. Many claim that the dried corn is much more delicious when prepared for table use, than the canned corn has ever been. Corn and tomatoes are canned together by many housewives, who claim that the corn keeps much better in the combination than when done by itself. The corn has a tough, woody fibre which requires long cooking and heat, and it also has the sweet properties which easily ferment. These things add to the difficulty of canning it.

Although our vegetables in this section have been plentiful, the canning of them has been a difficult task. Reports from different places all over the country show a heavy maintenance of effort on the part of canning to help in this movement of food conservation. In Kansas City, Kan., they have a paid supervisor of school gardens, and an expert canning demonstrator who spends all her time in teaching the method of putting up fruit and vegetables. Large quantities of peaches are being canned, as well as the usual kinds of vegetables. Very nice tomatoes for canning purposes are selling for $1 per bushel and large amounts are being put up for winter use. Even the western country has caught the fever and the canning of the fruit ranches, who generally can very little of their product, have gone into the work on an extensive scale. Ordinarily much of the service and damaged fruit not suitable for market has been allowed to waste. But this year much of it has been dried, canned or made into fruit jams. Several carloads of fruit have been required to care for the peach crop at Phoenix, Arizona this season, much of which is ordinarily wasted or fed to the hogs.

The fruit farms of the Pacific slope are also waking up and taking care of their surplus crop. The high price of dried fruits and the ease with which they can be transported, has caused the utilization of all that can be raised in that line. Stewed peaches are a standard food in the army and navy, as well as in the typical boarding houses, and this year they must be supplemented by dried peaches and apricots.

The difficulty of getting labor to assist in the work has been an extraordinary one. The women folk and children have rallied to the task and have really accomplished a great deal. It now seems that Uncle Sam is accumulating a great store of beautiful, wholesome food, not only for his own people, but to assist in the task of feeding the allies by reason of this season's work. Conservation has been the great idea and it has steadily accomplished its purpose.

Safety First.

Milton Junction

Milton Jct., Sept. 6.—The first day of the harvest festival was greeted by a nice shower which cleared the air for the day's gaieties.

The program as published was carried out, the patriotic and industrial parade was the largest and best ever given. This feature has been enlarged and improved each year, till this year it was fully a mile long.

Ex-Governor McGovern arrived at noon and was tendered a luncheon at the Hotel Morgan of twenty covers. Chairman J. A. Paul presided and the dining room and table were a bower of beauty.

The afternoon program opened with a song by Bob Daley of Janesville, who captured his audience. Ex-Gov. McGovern followed with a masterly address which was given the closest attention and frequent applause by an audience of four thousand people.

The shower at sundown dampened the ardor of the evening but the crowd was not disheartened and the merry making continued until a late hour.

The floral and agricultural exhibits with the beautiful flowers, mammoth corn, onions, potatoes and tomatoes, gave promise of an abundant harvest. The large exhibit of wheat proves that the acre of wheat campaign met with a ready response. In the culinary and fancy work department the housewives fully sustained their reputation and if you haven't dined before visiting you will surely be tempted to break two of the Lord's commandments.

Those from out of town who attended the luncheon were Judge Maxwell, Dr. Judd and Gardner Kivela, Prof. F. Holt of Egerton, Prof. J. D. Bond and Walter Rogers of Milton. W. F. Dooley of Janesville attended the festival here yesterday.

Mrs. W. F. Helme of Monroe is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Cole.

BLAZE A TRAIL FOR AMERICA'S MILLION TASK OF ENGINEERS

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Washington, Sept. 5.—Romance, mystery and peril blend in the tremendous task of the army ahead of the army which today is blazing a trail to the French front for America's million men.

It is the job of the engineers; and it means that every step of the barren way from French port to French front must be modernized into an elongated American city.

First of all, they must macadamize the highway, every foot of it. And over an area of several miles in the vicinity of the port and behind the front an intricate system of perfectly paved streets and avenues must be built.

Winding in and around both these terminals the engineers are fashioning a complicated system of railroads, both narrow and standard gauge, for switching, transferring and caring for troops and supplies.

Connecting with these two webs is a ribbon of paved roads, with branches and spurs shooting off here and there on both sides.

Every tin, every rail, every spike, every engine and every car for this system of railroads is being taken from this country. Not one bit of material, not a single man is being supplied by France.

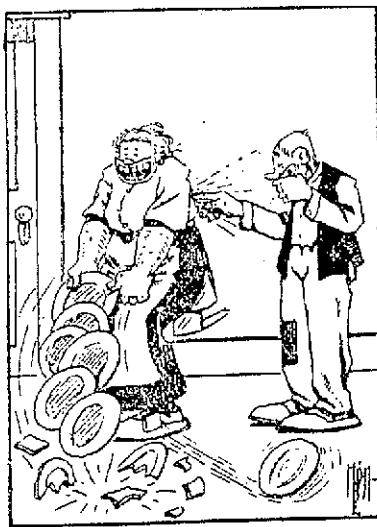

Great wooden camp cities are rising at both ends of this line. Power houses, permanent repair garages, hospitals for maintenance of way officials, water reservoirs with long conduits along the line and at the terminals.

The lumber for these structures is being hauled from the forests of France by regiments of American foresters.

Other regiments are rebuilding and enlarging docks and wharves at the port of arrival, and docking and opening new approaches in the bay for the big gun transports.

Sandwiched between America and France are sprouting up in the French forests.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

American-made well digging machines dot the line of communication. Electric light plants are blossoming forth to supply the trenches, dugouts, storehouses and cantonments with illumination.

Miles and miles of water pipe are being laid. Special regiments of American miners picked from the union are in charge of the American system of trenches, saps, transverse and approaches.

Expert companies of electricians are putting in an intricate system of battlefield illumination, including searchlights, trench lights, glare light apparatus and great piles of star bombs and rifle grenades.

But none of this complicated system of communication and approach must be visible to the enemy. It must all be dug in, buried or camouflaged. The highways must be neutralized in order to blend with the landscape. The railroad tracks must not glister.

All buildings must be half buried in the ground and the above ground portion disguised with bushes and shrubs and neutral colorings until they are invisible.

This is where the American artist does his bit. A number of well known American masters of color combinations are employed to solve the problems of obscuring our operations, our troops and artillery and our lines of communication from the enemy. The actual work will be done by American sign painters and soldiers trained in the craft.

NO EXEMPTION FOR STUDY OF MEDICINE

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)
Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 6.—No one can avoid military service by entering a medical school unless the student actually has an ambition to become a physician, according to Dr. L. P. Jermain, dean of Marquette College of Medicine.

"I believe the plan adopted by the war department is wise and will not create shirkers, as might be construed by some," said Dr. Jermain today. "The regulations, as I learned them through press dispatches, provide that students in the second, third and fourth years of school will be exempted. This excuses all men, except those in the draft, who have not had a year in college. Only about 10 percent will be affected in this way, as most of the medical aspirants enroll before they are twenty-one years old."

This arrangement really leaves no loophole for a possible evasion from service. The draft law does not include minors and it will be of no avail for a man liable to service to take up the study as a pretext, as he remains subject to the law until a year later. Therefore none will be attracted to the classrooms but those who have a desire to master the profession and be of service to the nation when they graduate. This desire does not come over night. We will keep our classrooms filled during the war, but with men who have a yearning for knowledge and practice in the medical world."

SAYS JAP CABINET OPPOSES DEMOCRACY

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Osaka, Japan, Sept. 6.—The trend of democracy in Japan is discussed in a leading article by the Osaka Mainichi, which questions the policy of the Terauchi cabinet because it is "eager for the preservation of clan and bureaucratic influence."

"For our part," the paper says, "we believe in a possibility of the harmonious existence side by side of monarchy and democracy in Japan. The throne has made it clear to the people that the democratic principles should be made the basis of administration. In these circumstances there is no need for the surprise which seems to be evinced by Count Terauchi and other bureaucrats at the news of the Russian revolution."

"Great Britain, Japan's ally, the United States, Russia, as well as China are all countries of democratic sympathies, and so there is no justifiable cause for fear if democratic ideas have caught hold of the Japanese people. Even in Germany—a veritable stronghold of militarists and bureaucrats—democracy appears to be making steady progress."

The newspaper concludes: "Notwithstanding the general tendency in the world in favor of democracy, the Terauchi cabinet, which is eager for the preservation of clan and bureaucratic influence, seems bent upon checking the growth of Democratic ideas contrary to the general current of thought throughout the world. Even the leaders of political parties professing democratic sympathies do not hesitate to bow their heads to bureaucracy. The position of democracy in Japan, therefore, may well be imagined. The wisdom of the Terauchi government in attempting to stem the tide of democracy is open to grave doubt."

News Notes from Movieland

BY DAISY DEAN

Rose Tapley, who has made thousands of friends during her long experience as a motion picture actress, had some wise words to say concerning censorship on her recent return home from a long tour of the country. She was commissioned to preach "better pictures" to the layman public in behalf of the entire industry. After months spent in observation in many cities, she said:

"The censorship wave, distressing as it is in detail is, I think, an augury for better pictures. At least that was the impression I received from the undercurrent of opinion that recognizes the necessity for some factor that will absolutely control the motion picture. I think the public wanted the vulgar, broad problem play, the unwholesome vampire and similar types. There would be no demand for censorship."

It is just because the public wants clean pictures that the industry now is beset with the censorial affliction. The cure lies with the manufacturer. When he makes it a point to produce only clean, wholesome pictures and guarantee to the public that they will not be asked to gaze upon scenes offensive to morals and good taste, then the censor boards will expire of inanition.

"This, briefly, is the lesson I learned during my pilgrimage, and I submit it to the industry for consideration."

HOW FOX DOES IT
William Fox has all scenarios submitted to his company read to him while he has shaved in a private barber shop in his office.

"Then I forget all about them until I bed time," says Fox. "Those that I like enough to make an impression on my sleeping brain hours before I remain there I know are the ones that will impress the audience."

SALARY WITH STIPULATIONS

Another screen actress is going to get one of those "largest salaries ever paid to any star." This time it is Lilit an Walker, the girl with the dimples. She has just signed a two-year contract to appear in sixteen productions, eight a year.

The company has placed at the disposal of Miss Walker a complete dress room installed in a limousine. There is a very unusual clause appearing in her contract, which provides that she shall expend from her own money a sum sufficient to provide a minimum of four new gowns, and a complete change of wearing apparel suitable to each gown, for each production.

The khaki is setting them. Two more men from the film land will don this week. Bud Fisher, who has had Mutt and Jeff cutting up wale caps for the camera, will leave for Plattsburg (training camp this week). Robert Warwick will also enter the officers' training camp there.

STATE GETS PLANT FOR POTATO DRYING

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)
Rhinelander, Wis., Sept. 6.—H. C. Gore, government chemist at the United States agricultural department is here for the purpose of drawing up a contract with local people for the establishment of the government potato drying plant to be moved from Arlington, Va. When moved here, Wisconsin will have the only plant of its kind in the United States. The machinery will be moved here as soon as the building is erected. The plant will occupy space 50x150 and will be two stories in height. Additions will be made as requirements from time to time are deemed necessary. Potato flakes from this factory, it is expected, will be served to United States soldiers in Europe.

"AMERICA" AND BRITISH AIR CONFUSED ENGLISH LADY

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
London, Sept. 6.—They've got a planola in the American Y. going all the time. And nearly every soldier picks out the same roll, one labeled "American Medley." Somewhere in the midst of the medley occurs "America."

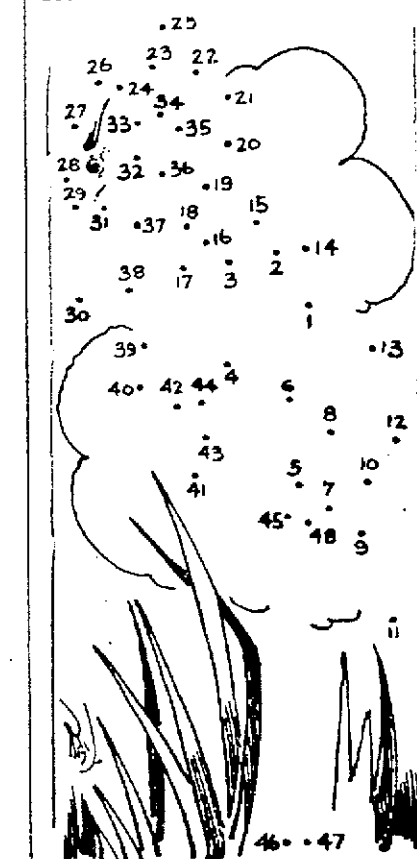

They've also got an English lady—capital L—managing the books of the Y. M. C. A. When she heard "America" the first day she thought it was "God Save the King" and stood up. In fact, she stood up nearly a hundred times. Finally some of the members seeing they weren't going to get any bookkeeping done, approached her diplomatically and explained that it is legal to sit still when "America" is played.

MARINETTE YOUNG MAN IS CITED FOR BRAVERY

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Marinette, Wis., Sept. 6.—Lloyd Colter, son of Dr. C. P. Colter, with the American Ambulance corps in France, has been cited in general orders of his commander for extreme bravery under fire on the nights of Aug. 8 and 9 on the front at Verdun. He is reported to have brought back from the firing line 19 wounded men, traversing a half mile of the fighting zone on foot.

Porter, another American in the same corps, received a citation for gallantry under fire.

Kirk MacNaughton of Kaukauna, companion of Colter, recently received a bullet through his steel helmet while aiding in the bringing of the wounded back. All three have been in the Verdun region for several weeks.

AMUSEMENTS

(Notices furnished by the theatres.)
MYERS THEATRE.

Sensational Young will climb the front of the Myers theatre on Milwaukee street at 6 o'clock sharp Friday P. M.

Arrangements were completed today for the sensational feat by Mammy Bransky of the Myers theatre, at which the Metropolitan Follies company will appear in the evening. It was necessary before the "Human Spider" could make the climb that the owners of the building and the city authorities be previously absolved of all responsibility for any accident which might occur through Mr. Young missing his hold or falling.

Perhaps this action was unnecessary as Sensational Young has yet to experience his first fall, though he has had many narrow escapes. The "Human Spider" starts from the ground, with only his hands and feet to depend upon, and will scale the side of the building, pulling himself up by such grips as he is able to secure on the building itself.

Climbing to him, he says, is as easy as walking a slanted board is to most people. He has gone up the sides of some of the largest buildings in the country, several of which have been sixteen stories high.

One good thing about fellows that like it fish—they never cripple any industry when they lay off. How some women kin sit on the front porch all forenoon is the real mystery in modern one neighborhood.

The Hillman

By

E. PHILLIPS OPENHEIM

Author of "The Double Traitor,"

(Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.)

She gripped his arm suddenly. She knew well enough that she had deliberately provoked his words, but there was a look in her face almost of fear. "Don't let us be too serious all at once," she begged quickly. "If you have one fault, my dear big friend from the country," she went on, with a swiftly assumed gaiety. "It is that you are too serious for your years. Sophy and I between us must try to cure you of that! You see, we have arrived."

"I Want to Feel Myself Nearer to You. I Want—"

He handed her out, followed her across the pavement, and found himself plunged into what seemed to him to be an absolute vortex of human beings, all dressed in very much the same fashion, all laughing and talking together very much in the same note, all criticizing every fresh group of arrivals with very much the same eyes and manner. The palm court was crowded with little parties seated at the various round tables, partaking languidly of the most indolent meal of the day. Even the broad passageway was full of men and women, standing about and talking or looking for tables one could scarcely hear the music of the orchestra for the babel of voices.

The prince of Seyre beckoned to them from the steps. He seemed to have been awaiting their arrival there—a cold, immaculate, and, considering his lack of height, a curiously distinguished-looking figure.

"I have a right inside," he told them as they approached. "It is better for conversation. The rest of the place is like a bear garden. I am not sure if they will dance here today, but if they do, they will come also into the restaurant."

"Wise man!" Louise declared. "I too, hate the babel outside." "We are faced," said the prince, as he took up the menu, "with our daily problem. What can I order for you?" "A cup of chocolate," Louise replied. "And Miss Sophy?" "Tau, please."

John, too, preferred tea; the prince ordered absinthio. "A polyglot meal, isn't it, Mr. Strangewey?" said Louise, as the order was executed; "not in the least what that wonderful old butler of yours would understand if you want to make a good impression on Mr. Strangewey. I am hoping that you two will be great friends."

Sophy turned toward John with a little grimace. "Louise is so tactless!" she said. "I am sure any idea you might have had of liking me will have gone already. Has it, Mr. Strangewey?" "On the contrary," he replied, a little stiffly, but without hesitation, "I was thinking that Miss Maurel could scarcely have set me a more pleasant task."

The girl looked reproachfully across at her friend. "You told me he came from the wilds and was quite unsophisticated!" she exclaimed.

"The truth," John assured them, looking with dismay at his little china cup, "comes very easily to us. We are brought up on it in Cumberland." "Don't chatter too much, child," Louise said benignly. "I want to hear some more of Mr. Strangewey's impressions. This is—well, if not quite a fashionable crowd, yet very nearly so. What do you think of it—the women, for instance?" "Well, to me," John confessed candidly, "they all look like dolls or manikins. Their dresses and their hats overshadow their faces. They seem all the time to be wanting to show, not themselves, but what they have on."

They all laughed. Even the prince's lips were parted by the flicker of a smile. Sophy leaned across the table with a sigh.

"Louise," she pleaded, "you will lend him to me sometimes, won't you? You won't keep him altogether to yourself? There are such a lot of places to take him to!"

"I was never greedy," Louise remarked, with an air of self-satisfaction. "If you succeed in making a favorable impression upon him, I promise you your share."

"Tell us some more of your impressions, Mr. Strangewey," Sophy begged. "You want to laugh at me," John protested good-humoredly. "On the contrary," the prince assured him, as he fitted a cigarette into a long amber tube, "they want to laugh with you. You ought to realize your value as a companion in these days. You are the only person who can see the truth. Eyes and tastes blurred with custom perceive so little. You are quite right when you say that these women are like manikins; that their bodies and faces are lost; but one does not notice it until it is pointed out."

"We will revert," Louise decided, "to a more primitive life. You and I will inaugurate a missionary enterprise, Mr. Strangewey. We will judge the world afresh. We will reclothe and rehabilitate it."

The prince flicked the ash from the end of his cigarette. "Morally as well as sartorially?" he asked.

There was a moment's rather queer silence. The music rose above the hubbub of voices and died away again. Louise rose to her feet. The prince, with a skillful maneuver, made his way to her side as they left the restaurant.

"Tomorrow afternoon, I think you said?" he repeated quietly. "You will be in town then?"

"Yes, I think so."

"You have changed your mind, then, about—"

"Mr. Gralliot will not listen to my leaving London," she interrupted rapidly. "He declares that it is too near the production of the play. My own part may be perfect, but he needs me for the sake of the others. He puts it like a Frenchman, of course."

They had reached the outer door, which was being held open for them by a bowing commissionaire. John and Sophy were waiting upon the pavement. The prince drew a little back. "I understand," he murmured.

CHAPTER VII.

The first few minutes that John spent in Louise's little house were full of acute and vivid interest. The room that he was so eagerly studying confirmed his cloudy impressions of its owner. There was, for a woman's apartment, a curious absence of ornamentation and knickknacks. The walls were black and white; the carpet was white; the furniture graceful in its outline, rather heavy in build, and covered with old-rose colored chintz. There were water-colors upon the wall, some small black-and-white fantasies, puzzling to John, who had never even heard the term futurist. A table, drawn up to the side of one of the easy chairs, was covered with books and magazines, some Italian, a few English, the greater part French; and upon a smaller one, close at hand, stood a white bowl full of pink roses. Their odor was somehow reminiscent of Louise, curiously sweet and wholesome—an odor which suddenly took him back to the morning when she had come to him from under the canopy of apple-blossom. His heart began to beat with pleasure even before the opening of the door announced her presence. She came in with Sophy, who at once seated herself by his side.

"We have been making plans," Louise declared, "for disposing of you for the rest of the day." John smiled happily. "You're not sending me away, then? You're not acting this evening?" "Not until three weeks next Monday," she replied. "Then, if you are good, and the production is not postponed, you may seat yourself in a box and make all the noise you like after the fall of the curtain. These are real holidays for me, except for the nuisance of rehearsals. You couldn't have come at a better time."

Sophy glanced at the clock. "Well," she said, "I must show my respect to that most ancient of adages by taking my departure. I feel—"

"You will do nothing of the sort, child," Louise interrupted. "I want to interest you in the evolution of Mr. Strangewey. We must remember that it is his first night in London. What aspect of it shall we attempt to show him? Don't say a word, Sophy. It is not for us to choose."

"I'm afraid there isn't any choice," John declared, his face falling. "I haven't any clothes except what you see me in."

"Hooray!" Sophy exclaimed. "Oh, with your smart gown, Louise! We'll be splendidly Bohemian. You shall put on your black frock and a black hat, and powder your nose, and we'll all go to Guido's first and drink vermouth. I can't look the part, but I can act!"

"But tell me," Louise asked him, "did you lose your luggage?"

"I brought none," he answered.

They both looked at him—Sophy politely curious, Louise more deeply interested.

"You mean," Louise demanded, "that after waiting all these months you started away upon impulse like that—without even letting your brother know or bringing any luggage?"

"That's exactly what I did," John agreed, smiling. "I had a sovereign in my pocket when I had bought my ticket. The joke of it was," he went on, joining in the girls' laughter, "that Mr. Appleton has been worrying me for months to come up and talk over reinvestments, and take control of the money my uncle left me; and when I came at last, I arrived like a pauper. He went out himself and bought my shirt."

"And a very nice shirt, too," Sophy declared, glancing at the pattern. "Do tell us what else happened?"

"Well, not much more," John replied. "Mr. Appleton stuffed me full of money and made me take a little suite of rooms at what he called a more fashionable hotel. He stayed to lunch with me, and I have promised to see him on business tomorrow morning."

The two girls sat up and wiped their eyes.

"Oh, this is a wonderful adventure you have embarked upon!" Louise exclaimed. "You have come quite in the right spirit. It is your first night here, Mr. Strangewey, so I warn you that Sophy is the most irresponsible and capricious of all my friends."

Sophy made a grimace.

Dinner Stories

He was a rascally young man, and kept very late hours, but had now joined the National Guard and was bidding farewell to his beloved home to her home in Janesville.

"Darling, when I am far away will thou gaze at me star every night and think of me?" "I will, indeed, dearest," she replied. "If I needed anything to remind me of you, I should choose that very star."

"Why?" he asked. "Because it is out so late at night and looks so pale in the morning."

Lincoln Steffens, the writer, believes in free speech—the right to say anything, any time and anywhere. And he has organized a club to that effect.

A short time ago Mr. Steffens made a speech advocating his theory.

ries. At the end he invited those who would to join his "Free Speech Club." Only one man accepted the invitation.

He said: "I'd like to join your club long enough to tell you what I think about it."

Visitor—Your little boy doesn't seem to me very cheerful. Isn't he well?

Broker—Yes, he's well enough, but he is feeling rather blue just now. You see, there was a great drop in leather this morning.

Visitor—Bless me! You don't mean to tell me that child knows anything about the market?

Broker—Well, perhaps not, apparently speaking, but you see the particle of leather that dropped this morning was his mother's slipper.

Teamster's Life Saved; Peterson Is Happy

I was afflicted with a very severe sore on my leg for years. I am a teamster. I tried all medicines and salves, but without success. I tried doctors, but they failed to cure me. I couldn't sleep for many nights from pain. Doctors said I could not live more than two years. Finally Peterson's Ointment was recommended to me and by its use the sore was quickly healed. Thankfully yours, William Haase, West Park, Ohio, care P. G. Reitz, Box 189.

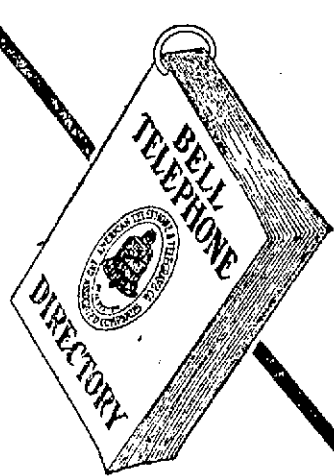

"I am proud of the above letter," says Peterson. "It makes me happy. I have hundreds of others that tell of wonderful cures of Eczema, Piles and Skin Diseases, Pimples, Blackheads and ugly blemishes."

Peterson's Ointment is 25 cents at all druggists, and there isn't a broad minded druggist in America that won't praise it. Advertisement.

IS YOUR NAME

in the city directory? Is your name in the telephone directory?

You know the importance of having your name or the name of your business in each of these directories. And if you're in business you know the big advantage of letting people know where you may be located.

What about The Gazette classified advertising directory? Every day this page is consulted by people in and around Janesville who have formed the habit of consulting the classified ad directory just as you consult the city directory or the telephone directory.

For a few cents a day, you can give your business message here, where buyers will know who you are and what you have to sell.
